New York's mighty hosts of Organized Labor turned out in greater force to-day than ever before on the recurrence of Labor

There were two parades, each of them gigantic in proportions, and not less than 10,000 men marched behind the standards of their respective organizations. HOSTS OF THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION. The demonstration by the Central Labor Union was not less imposing. Inspector Williams and 100 policeman overlooked the preparations for the Union's parade with Cooper Union as the central point. The several bodies taking part in this pa-rade assembled in the streets from Sixth to Thirteenth, and Grand Marshal Charles P. Rogers commanded an army of which he night be proud.

"Big Six," the greatest of American Typographical Unions, had, as a matter of course, the right of the line and led the parade.
